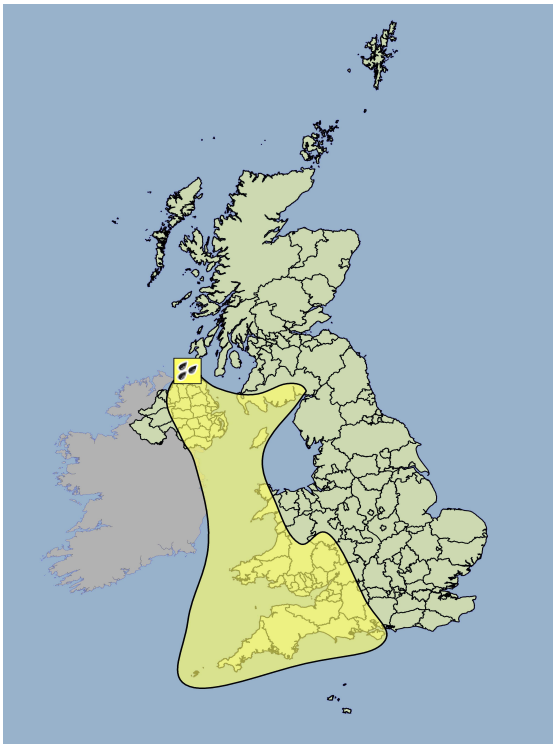
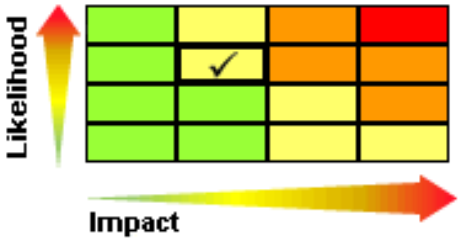
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deepening low pressure system will track northwards close to western Britain on Sunday night with the associated frontal system likely to bring another spell of heavy rain and gales to western and southwestern areas during Monday. Another 10 to 20 mm of rain, perhaps with 30 mm or more locally, is possible in areas already saturated. Winds will also strengthen to give gusts of 50 to 60 mph and locally 70 mph or more around exposed coasts and headlands. Gales coupled with high tides will also increase the risk of coastal flooding in exposed areas.
There remains some uncertainty in the extent and severity of the wind and rain and the possible impacts. Therefore please watch for possible updates to this alert.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 00:15 on Mon, 03rd Feb 2014 until 18:00 on Mon, 03rd Feb 2014

Another spell of wet and very windy weather is expected to cross the UK from the west during Monday. Outbreaks of heavy rain will be accompanied by strengthening south or southeast winds which may also combine with high tides to increase the risk of coastal flooding in exposed locations. Northern Ireland, southwestern parts of England and Wales and parts of southwest Scotland are most prone.

The public should be aware of the risk of further disruption, particularly to travel.
